Re: Application for Role Title

Dear Hiring Manager Name,

[Opening: one real, specific detail about the company or product from the posting, and why that's exactly the kind of problem I like owning.]

At NOWN, the CEO handed me a decorative ceiling and wall system that ships with its own digital configurator, and asked me to own it as Product Manager, start to finish. That meant a physical, manufactured product and a piece of software, developed and launched together, with me at the centre of both: driving the product from design through production, managing the developer building the configurator, writing the requirements that kept engineering aligned to what the product actually needed to do, and leading the go-to-market so the launch landed as a story, not just a ship date.

That instinct, treating the product itself as the job and not just the marketing around it, is where I started, not where I arrived. At ChatLicense I worked inside the development team on a pre-launch digital-literacy app, then took it into schools across the Netherlands to user-test it myself, feeding what I learned straight back into the product before it shipped. Different company, same loop: build, test with real people, refine, repeat. [Optional third beat for PM-heavy roles: the Carve launch system or the search audit, whichever matches the posting better.]

What ties those two products together is what I'd bring to Company Name: I don't hand the roadmap to someone else to explain. I read the data, make the call, and can brief the creative myself when the story needs telling. Trilingual in English, Arabic and French, agency-trained, and at my best when there's a lot in motion and a problem worth solving.

I'd like to bring that same range to Company Name, and I'm happy to walk you through that launch in detail. My full case studies are at essiazarroukzarrouk2001-alt.github.io/essia-portfolio.

Best regards,
